Hospitality Management program gets good start

When Carl Riegel arrived on campus last month to assume the directorship of the Hospitality Management program, he was pleasantly surprised to find 60 declared majors waiting for him.

That kind of student interest in a College of Business Administration program that has yet to be publicized is evidence of the popularity of the University's decision in April 1985 to initiate a course of study to provide managerial talent for the hospitality industry.

With an average annual growth rate of more than 10 percent, the industry has become one of the hot fields for today's college graduates.

Consider that:

- The average family spends more than 40 percent of its food dollars in restaurants, up 33.1 percent from 1970.

- Total food service sales in 1984 amounted to a record $173 billion.

- Lodging industry sales for 1985 were $36.4 billion, up nearly a billion from the previous year.

- Ohio was ranked sixth nationally in 1980 in eating place sales, an important part of the state's economy.

- Ohio is one of the country's leading food service and lodging states with 21 of the top 400 food service chains and three of the major lodging chains headquartered in the state.

That kind of growth has led to a demand for managers skilled in the application of business techniques, says Dr. Riegel.

He is quick to note that Bowling Green's entrance into the hospitality market is not unique. There are about 135 four-year programs around the country in addition to a number of two-year offerings at technical schools, including some in Ohio which he describes as "very good."

However, Bowling Green's program is somewhat different than others, many of which concentrate on technical skills, because of its ties to the College of Business Administration, says Dr. Riegel.

The industry has become a corporate-dominated one with a need for people with strong management and problem-solving abilities. "We expect to equip our graduates with both short- and long-term skills needed in an industry experiencing rapid and complex changes," he said.

Bowling Green's curriculum calls for a solid grounding in basic business areas including accounting, economics, communications, management and marketing. When students reach their third year in the program, they will begin taking coursework applying their general business background to specific hospitality situations.

Riegel brings experience to director's post

Carl D. Riegel, who became director of the Hospitality Management program in January, has been involved in hospitality management education since his graduation from St. Louis University in 1976.

Prior to joining the faculty, he was an associate professor from 1983-85 in the School of Hotel and Food Administration at the University of Guelph in Ontario, Canada. He had undergraduate and graduate teaching assignments at that university.

While working toward a master's degree in management at Webster University in St. Louis, he taught courses in hotel management at St. Louis Community College and designed and implemented an associate degree program in hotel and restaurant management at Jefferson College in Hillsboro, Mo.

In 1978 he joined the faculty at Pennsylvania State University as an assistant professor of food service

Seventy-fifth Anniversary Fund

Program receives first grant

The Hospitality Management program has received its first grant — a $25,000 award from the Edgar W. Ingram Foundation of Columbus.

The grant, part of the University's 75th Anniversary Fund, will provide scholarships for junior and senior majors who plan management careers in the hospitality industry. As many as seven students will be eligible for Ingram scholarships during each of the next five years.

The Ingram Foundation, established in 1949 by the late E.W. Ingram, founder of the White Castle System, Inc., supports projects that link the classroom with the world of work.

"It is very encouraging that the Ingram Foundation recognizes what we are doing for the hospitality industry and supports our efforts with a grant," said Carl Riegel, director of the program.

and housing administration. In 1980, Penn State awarded him a Statler Doctoral Fellowship and he received his doctorate in 1983.

His industry experience includes several positions, including manager of three terminal restaurants for Host International at the St. Louis International Airport.

An active researcher, Dr. Riegel's work has been published in several trade and industry journals and he has been invited to present papers at numerous meetings and conventions.

Badia, Behling named as University Professors

Pietro Badia

Orlando Behling

Two faculty members were named University Professors Friday, Feb. 14, by the Board of Trustees.

Pietro Badia, psychology, and Orlando Behling, management, each received the new title, one of the highest honors that can be given to a faculty member by the trustees.

This is the first time the trustees have named two University Professors simultaneously. Only seven other faculty members in Bowling Green's history have been so honored.

Dr. Badia has been on the faculty since 1963. Prior to that he taught at Adelphi College, where he earned his doctorate in 1962. He holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Kent State University.

Dr. Badia has published widely. In 1974, he was presented a Research and Development Recognition Award by the University in honor of his significant contributions to his field. A year later, the University awarded him a $1,500 Special Achievement Award in recognition of his research efforts.

During the 1970s, the behavioral psychologist's research focused on the effects of predictable and unpredictable environmental events as well as controllable and uncontrollable events.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars in grants have been awarded to the University to support research in which Dr. Badia is involved.

The most recent award, $137,666 from the National Institute of Health, is enabling him to continue a project that may some day help millions of Americans sleep better.

British philosopher finds U.S. to his liking

British philosopher Antony G.N. Flew is enjoying his stay in Bowling Green.

If he isn't in his cozy office at the Social Philosophy and Policy Center, then more than likely he can be found buried in books at Jerome Library.

Antony Flew

Flew of Reading, England, is serving as a distinguished research fellow at the center and will be spending the spring semester at the University from 1986 to 1988. The congenial philosopher is one of the founders of the modern analytic philosophy movement.

For Flew the time he is spending in Bowling Green has been necessary for him to catch up on research projects he has been wanting to do for many years.

"I've just been scribbling and scribbling," he says, noting that he is impressed with the philosophy collection at Jerome Library. "It's outstandingly good."

For Bowling Green, Flew's presence on campus is an opportunity to tap his expertise, which has developed over years of teaching, researching and debating.

"Professor Flew has been one of the major forces in Anglo-American philosophy for three decades," said Jeffrey Paul, associate director of the center. "The opportunity of having him here for faculty and graduate students, in particular, is invaluable in a number of sub-disciplines in which he has expertise."

The University has tapped that resource already once this semester by featuring Flew at a Jan. 29 symposium on modern philosophy. Flew will be the featured speaker again on Feb. 24 at a general meeting of the graduate faculty, according to Lou Katzner, interim dean of the Graduate College.

The program is scheduled for 7:15 p.m. in the Campus Room, University Union. Flew's speech is entitled "The Logic of Mortality."

It will be a rare opportunity for the campus community to hear what is likely to be the first of 10 lectures that Flew is preparing for presentation in Scotland next fall as part of the prestigious Gifford Lecture series.

"This is one of the projects I've been wanting to do for 35 years," said Flew, a philosophical atheist.

"I don't think the doctrine of future life can be gotten off the ground," he said. "Believing in survival after death is about as silly as the Cheshire Cat in Alice in Wonderland."

Flew has had a lot of practice debating religious doctrine over the years, including taking on champions of Southern Baptist Jerry Falwell and representatives of the conservative Church of Christ.

"They know what it's all about," he said of the church people he has been invited to debate. "They're basically very friendly Americans. It's amazing how much nicer they are than their god."

Flew's opinions about religion, which he admits are "far from aggressive," pose an interesting contrast to his background. He is the only child of a Methodist minister. His wife, who is a teacher in Reading, is the great-granddaughter of a rabbi.

Flew said his entry into philosophy was "largely accidental." The British educational system requires that young students, at about high school age, pick their area of specialization. Since he had already studied the classics at school, Flew decided to stick with that area instead of going back two or three years to start over in the sciences.

After World War II, Flew received his degree from Oxford University in philosophy and ancient history. "I should have been in economics," he said, smiling. "I had an interest in philosophy, but thought I'd lean toward psychology. But in the end I stayed with philosophy."

Flew taught for more than 20 years, before ending up in Reading. He has taken several sabbatical trips to colleges and universities throughout the world.

"I very much like the United States," he said, adding that if his wife didn't have a good teaching job back in England "I would have settled here long ago."

For the time being, Flew will be spending his time in the United States in Bowling Green.

Obituaries

Former professor George R. Snyder, 92, Sarasota, Fla., died recently at his residence.

Dr. Snyder, who taught in the College of Education and Allied Professions, retired from the University in 1963, after teaching for 15 years. He had attended the University of Chicago, graduated from Heidelberg College and received his master's and doctoral degrees from The Ohio State University.

Memorials may be made to the George R. Snyder Award, an endowed scholarship which had been established at the college several weeks before his death.

Ralph L. Beck, 83, professor emeritus of education, died recently in Bradenton, Fla. He has been on the University faculty from 1946 to 1971.

He earned his bachelor's degree from Indiana State Teachers College, a master's from Indiana University and a doctorate from New York University.

Owen D. Montgomery, 83, 417 N. Main St., died recently in Bowling Green. He had served on the business education faculty at the University for 25 years, until his retirement in 1971.

He earned a bachelor's degree at Ohio University and a master's degree from the University of Pittsburgh. He completed some post-graduate studies at New York University.

Anthony B. Baynard, 77, 3 Orchard Circle, died recently in Bowling Green. Dr. Baynard was professor emeritus of romance languages at the University, where he had taught from 1946 to 1977.

He was a graduate of Scranton University, held a master's degree from Columbia University and did additional post-graduate work at the University of Michigan and Case Western Reserve University. He had also studied at the Sorbonne in Paris and Laval University in Quebec.

The funding is the first portion of a two-year grant which will enable Dr. Badia to test a technique which offers promise for helping those with sleep disorders characterized by irregular breathing.

The project also is receiving funds from the Sleep Disorder Center at St. Vincent Medical Center in Toledo. The center is providing a $10,000 fellowship for a Bowling Green graduate student and a $7,000 student assistantship. St. Vincent also provides Dr. Badia's research team access to its equipment, computer facilities, administrative assistance and office space. University students have received clinical training at the center and participated in on-going collaborative research since 1984 through an affiliation agreement between the institutions.

Dr. Behling was educated at the University of Wisconsin where he received a bachelor's degree in industrial psychology and master's and doctoral degrees in industrial relations.

He has taught courses in organization behavior and organizational development at Bowling Green since 1981. He previously taught at The Ohio State University and was personnel administrator for manpower development and communications for Control Data Corp.

Dr. Behling has written more than 40 articles for professional and scholarly journals and is the co-author of the textbook, Organizational Behavior: Theory, Research and Application. A licensed psychologist, he is a member of the American Psychological Association and its Division of Industrial and Organizational Psychology.

Dr. Behling also is a member of the Academy of Management and its Organizational Behavior and Organization Theory divisions. He has served as president of the academy's midwest division and last year was named editor of the Academy of Management Review, a leading scholarly journal published quarterly. He previously served on that publication's editorial board as well as on the editorial board of The Journal of Business Research.

Dr. Behling's research interests include all aspects of organization behavior and theory, particularly individual motivation and decision making, stress and the philosophy of science of organization studies.

Other Bowling Green faculty who have been awarded the title of University Professor include William B. Jackson, emeritus professor of biological sciences; Bernard Sternsher, history; Janis Pallister, emeritus professor of romance languages; Ray Browne, popular culture; Robert Guion, emeritus professor of psychology; and former professors Eugene Lukacs, mathematics, and Frank Baldanza, English. John Paul Scott, emeritus professor of psychology, holds the similar rank of Regents Professor.

Writer Kay Boyle to give reading

The distinguished novelist, short story writer, poet, magazine correspondent and essayist Kay Boyle will read from her work on Thursday, Feb. 20, at Prout Chapel.

Boyle is a visiting writer-in-residence this term in the English department where she is teaching a creative writing workshop and studies in contemporary fiction.

The reading, which is open and free to the public, begins at 8 p.m.

Boyle was born in St. Paul, Minn., in 1902. As a bride in the 1920s, she moved to Paris with her French husband. It was there, as an intimate of a set that included Ernest

Humor is taken seriously

Howard Pollio will be "Taking Humor Seriously" when he presents a public lecture on that topic Thursday, Feb. 20, as part of the Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar Program.

A distinguished service professor of psychology at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, Dr. Pollio will speak at 8 p.m. in Gish Film Theater. He will discuss the study of humor and why that study has interested so many thinkers, from Aristotle to Freud.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

In addition to the evening lecture, Dr. Pollio will meet informally with students and faculty as well as take part in classroom and seminar discussions during a two-day visit to campus.

In addition, students are required to take a home economics sequence including meal service management and quantity food production management.

All students must accumulate 800 hours of hospitality industry work before they can graduate. "It's still a traditional industry that seldom hires people without some past experience," says Dr. Riegel.

"Students will typically be doing kitchen work, waitressing, cooking, staffing a front desk, working in the business office or on the maintenance staff. The intent is that anyone going into management positions needs to have some knowledge of all phases of the business. The 800 hours of industry work should be quite meaningful to students."

He warns students that the hospitality profession is not for everyone. To be successful a person must genuinely like people. "This is a 'people' industry and the best managers are those who can effectively relate to both customers and employees."

She has written more than a dozen novels as well as poetry and numerous short stories and novelettes published in such magazines as The New Yorker, Saturday Evening Post, Harper's and Mademoiselle.

Among her more than 30 books are Death of a Man, A Frenchman Must Die, Generation With Farewell, The Underground Woman and This is Not a Letter and Other Poems, which includes poetry written for her friends Samuel Beckett, Babette Deutsch and Joyce.

A collection of her selected essays, Words That Must Somehow Be Said, has been published recently by North Point Press.

She was the recipient of the O'Henry Prize for "Wedding Day," which was judged the best short story of 1935. Her lifetime work has been recognized with grants from the Before Columbus Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts. She also has received two Guggenheim fellowships and is a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Correction

The name of the international accounting firm of Ernst & Whinney was misspelled in the Feb. 10 edition of the Monitor.

Unlike managers in other types of business, those in the hospitality industry do not work normal hours. The industry serves people when they want to be served, and that means managers must have responsibilities that include some nights, weekends and holidays. They also have a tendency to be relocated several times in their careers.

But, Dr. Riegel adds, for those willing to work, the rewards are well worth it. Job placement generally is 100 percent and starting salaries compare favorably (about $17-22,000) with those of other business graduates.

Most graduates will begin their hospitality careers in management training spots, but Dr. Riegel says they eventually will work themselves into top level positions including regional managers, general managers and vice presidents. Also, while the majority of jobs are with restaurant and lodging firms, other opportunities exist, particularly in such food service-related areas as airline catering, nursing homes, hospitals and colleges.

Computer Services prepares for open house

University Computer Services will be having an open house on Friday, Feb. 21, from 10 a.m.-3 p.m.

The following facilities will be on display:

- Kohl Hall Microcomputer Laboratory: This is the largest of the residence hall microcomputer labs, where submit capabilities to the IBM mainframe and a high-speed printer have been added.

- Library Microcomputer Laboratory: This is a new lab that opened in March 1985. It has 25 IBM and 20 Apple Macintosh microcomputers and a recently installed network for 10 of the IBM microcomputers. This is the first general purpose lab.

- Microcomputer Repair Center (basement of Health Center): The renovation of this area was recently completed and is the new home of the repair staff.

- The Faculty, Staff and Graduate Student Consulting Center (102 Hayes Hall): This is the main research facility that provides consulting services and a variety of microcomputer hardware, terminals, dot matrix and letter quality printers and terminals to the mainframe systems. It is also home of the Information Center and the area where microcomputers are demonstrated and sold.

- University Union Microcomputer Laboratory (former Carnation Room): This is the largest of the labs with over 45 IBM and 20 Apple II microcomputers. It also has five IBM microcomputers for submitting student programs to the IBM mainframe and two 1200-line per minute printers.

- DEC Computer Room (240 Math Science): This area houses the DEC 2060, VAX 785 mainframe computer systems and the Imagen Laser printer. This is the hub of academic computing services.

- DEC Terminal Room (128 Math Science): This area has 43 terminals connected to the DEC 2060, VAX 780 and VAX 785 and is the primary academic terminal facility. Also located here is the CALCOMP 1012 four-pen color plotter.

- Research Graphic Laboratory (144 Math Science): This is the newest lab with over $250,000 worth of high-quality, high-resolution research graphics equipment.

- Technology Microcomputer Laboratory (247 Technology Building): This lab opened last fall and contains 10 IBM, 10 Apple Macintosh, 9 Apple II and 12 Intel microcomputers, four terminals to the DEC computers, a high-speed reader and a 600-line per minute printer for submitting and printing programs that run on the IBM mainframe.

- The IBM Computer Center (305 Administration Building): This is the home of the new IBM 4381 mainframe computer system, which was installed last summer, and the new IBM 4248-3600 line per minute printing system. This center provides all of the University's centralized administrative computing and academic batch computing.

At each location will be a user or staff member to explain how they or their students use the facilities and to demonstrate the equipment. Refreshments will be available in the basement of the Health Center and outside the Research Graphics Lab. Tours at all facilities will be continuous except at the IBM Computer Center in the Administration Building and the DEC Computer room in the Math Science Building, where tours will start every 15 minutes.

Two alumni featured at benefit performance

Two distinguished University alumni are returning to campus for a benefit performance in celebration of the University's 75th anniversary.

Tenor Jon West of the New York City Opera Company and violinist J. Patrick Rafferty of the Dallas Symphony will perform at 8 p.m. Monday, Feb. 24, in Kobacker Hall, Moore Musical Arts Center. Concert proceeds will benefit the talent scholarship fund of the College of Musical Arts.

West, a Dayton native and 1974 graduate of Bowling Green, has been dazzling audiences throughout the country with his powerful voice and acting ability. A former student of Rex Eikum at the University, West has performed under such distinguished maestros as Zubin Mehta and the late Eugene Ormandy. He has won awards from the National Opera Institute, Opera America, the Liederkranz Foundation and the William H. Sullivan Foundation.

Rafferty, a former Toledoan, studied with Paul Makara before graduating from Bowling Green in 1970. He is presently associate concertmaster of the Dallas Symphony with which he performs more than 250 concerts annually. Yet Rafferty also finds time to make solo appearances with other orchestras, the St. Louis Symphony and Cincinnati Symphony, among them. In addition, he has been a member of the New Marlboro Chamber Players and the Dallas Symphony Chamber Players.

During the Monday evening program, Rafferty will perform "Sonatina in D Major" by Schubert, "Sonata" by Debussy, "Romance" by Dvorak and two pieces by Sarasate, "Malaguena" and "Zapateado."

West will sing a number of selections, including "There is a Lady Sweet and Kind" by Norman Dello Joio, "A Dream" by Edvard Grieg and "Nessun dorma" by Puccini.

Tickets to the concert go on sale today, Feb. 17, at the Moore Musical Arts Center box office, which is open between 10:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tickets, which cost $5, $10 and $15, can be reserved by calling 372-8171.

In addition to the evening performance, both alumni are scheduled to give master classes at the College of Musical Arts. West is scheduled for 2:30-3:30 p.m. Friday, Feb. 21, in Bryan Recital Hall and Rafferty's class will meet from 3:30-5 p.m. Monday, Feb. 24, in Kobacker Hall.

Scientist promotes ecology

The globe strapped to the back of J.R. Vallentyne's back is part of the serious message about ecology that he carries into classrooms across North America.

Vallentyne, alias Johnny Biosphere, is a senior scientist at the Canada Center for Inland Waters, Great Lakes Fisheries Research Branch in Burlington, Ontario. He will be appearing at the University and area elementary schools on Tuesday, Feb. 18. His campus presentation will begin at 7:30 p.m. in 110 Business Administration Building.

His Bowling Green visit is sponsored by the Center for Environmental Programs.

Dean candidates selected

The search and screening committee for associate vice president for research and dean of the Graduate College has announced that five candidates have been selected to be interviewed on campus.

Each candidate is scheduled to present brief remarks and be available to answer questions. All faculty members are invited to attend the presentations.

The presentations are scheduled to take place in the McFall Center Assembly Room on Feb. 20, 1:30-2:30 p.m.; Feb. 25, 1:15-2:15 p.m.; Feb. 27, 1:30-2:30 p.m.; March 3, 1:30-2:30 p.m. and March 5, 1:30-2:30 p.m.

Evaluation forms and summary resumes will be available in the department/school offices.

Play auditions open

Open auditions for "The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui" will be held at 7 p.m. today, Feb. 17, and Tuesday, Feb. 18, in 400 University Hall.

The play, written by Bertolt Brecht, is being co-produced by the departments of theater and German and Russian.

Monitor

Monitor is published weekly by the Office of Public Relations for faculty and staff of Bowling Green State University. The deadline to submit material for the next issue, Monday, Feb. 24, is 5 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 18. Editor: Paul E. Kostyu Student Assistant: Monica Karrer Photographer: William Brown Contributors: Clifton P. Boutelle, Teri Sharp and Gardner A. McLean Jr.

Discovery Day attracts Toledo area students

About 130 Toledo area high school juniors and seniors are expected to take part in Discovery Day on Feb. 19 at the University.

The program is part of the University's efforts to attract a larger number of minority students.

According to Laura Tellez, assistant director of admissions, the half-day program will give minority students a chance to visit the campus and become more familiar with the University's offerings.

All of the students invited to attend have demonstrated potential for success on the college level, she said.

Teenagers from Libbey, Clay, Woodward, Scott, Central Catholic, DeVilbiss, St. Francis, Start, Whitmer, Rogers and St. Ursula high schools as well as Maumee Valley Country Day School are expected to attend. The University is providing transportation.

Participating in the program, which begins at 9:30 a.m., will be Mary Edmonds, vice president for student affairs; Robert Romero, vice president of the Latino Student Union; Cassie Madden, president of the Black Student Union, and Lisa Chavers, assistant director of admissions.

Students will hear presentations about campus life, academic programs, admissions and financial aid. They will also receive a tour of campus and have an opportunity to meet with college advisers.

Another Discovery Day program has been scheduled for April 23, said Tellez. Minority students from Cleveland area high schools as well as from schools in Fostoria, Fremont and Findlay will be invited to take part at that time, she said.

This is the second year Bowling Green has sponsored the Discovery Day program.

Postal workshops offered

Two postal workshops are being offered to the campus community.

Topics to be covered in the workshops include: campus post office policies and procedures, USPS Express Mail-next day service, bulk mail rates and requirements, international mail and first-class presorting.

The workshops are scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 18, 2-3 p.m., and Thursday, Feb. 20, 9-10 a.m., both in the Capitol Room, University Union.

In Brief

Free seminars available

The following computer seminars are available to faculty, staff and graduate students:

- Introduction to MacWrite on Macintosh with hands-on creating and editing of documents (also available to undergraduate students), Feb. 20, 1:30-3:30 p.m., and Feb. 26, 7-9 p.m., both in technology lab.

- Advanced concepts to Lotus 1-2-3 on the IBM PC, with hands-on basic data base, graphics application and report formatting, Feb. 25, 1:30-4:30 p.m., library lab.

- Getting started with the Research VAX 11/785 and UNIX, covers appropriate operating system commands and the VI editor, Feb. 28, 3:30-5 p.m., 224 Math Science.

- Introduction to IBM Personal Editor, with hands-on creating files using original Personal Editor diskettes, March 3, 1:30-3:30 p.m., library lab.

- Importing and exporting files between Multimate, PC-File III and Lotus 1-2-3 on the IBM PC, with hands-on sharing common data files among various software, March 5, 8:30-11:30 a.m., library lab.

- Introduction to IBM JCL, covering rules of JCL, tape and disk use, March 7, 3:30-5:30 p.m., 224 Math Science.

To register for any of the free seminars, contact the secretary in 238 Math Science (372-2102).

Calendar being prepared

The Publications Committee of the University Activities Organization is now making preparations for publishing the 1986-87 Day-By-Day Calendar.

The calendar serves as a useful guide for faculty, staff and students to collegiate events and deadlines.

Groups wishing to use this free method of publicizing their activities should:

- Compile a list of all activities scheduled for the 1986-87 academic year (Aug. 10, 1986-May 31, 1987).

- Include the date, time, place, cost and any other pertinent information for each event.

- Indicate the name of the group as well as the name and phone number of a person to contact for verification

Video series prepared

A series of three seminars on video technologies is scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 20, in the University Union.

Stanley Huffman Jr., director of the Learning Resources Center at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and a noted author, producer and consultant on instructional technologies, will present "Video as a Tool of Your Trade."

The seminars will feature examples of work done using portable video equipment as well as techniques for working with larger video studios. Techniques being used in Virginia to offer engineering courses state-wide using satellite technology also will be shown. Dr. Huffman will present information about current copyright regulations.

Sessions are scheduled from 9:30-11 a.m., Campus Room, and 1-2:30 p.m. and 2:45-4 p.m., Alumni Room. To register for one or more of the sessions, call the Instructional Media Center (372-2881).

The program is being co-sponsored by IMC and WBGU-TV.

Angela Davis making Black History Month appearance

Angela Davis, who in 1970 made the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted List" and has twice run as the vice presidential candidate on the U.S. Communist Party ticket, will appear on campus as part of the University's celebration of Black History Month.

Davis' speech, which is free and open to the public, is scheduled for 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 21, in 115 Education Building.

During her speech, Davis is expected to discuss racism in the United States, continuing the dream of Martin Luther King Jr. and apartheid in South Africa. She is also expected to discuss her own life.

Davis, who was fired from the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles in 1969, came to national attention in 1970 when she was implicated and charged with planning the bloody escape attempt of four black revolutionaries. The four were on trial in the Marin, Calif., County Courthouse when the escape was attempted. In the ensuing shoot-out, four people died and Davis became a fugitive.

After a nationwide search, Davis was captured and imprisoned without bail. Sixteen months later, she was acquitted of the charges.

Out of the movement to gain her release grew the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Repression, of which Davis is a founder and co-chair. She has led the group in several major demonstrations since 1972 and has spoken on behalf of the NAARPR across the nation.

In 1979, the Soviet Union awarded Davis the Lenin Peace Prize, and in 1980 and 1984 she was the vice presidential candidate on the Communist Party ticket.

Davis has written numerous articles about black liberation, political prisoners and the judicial system, the struggle for women's equality and United States history. She has also written two books, Angela Davis: An Autobiography and Women, Race and Class.

Currently, she teaches courses in philosophy, women's studies and history at San Francisco State University, the San Francisco Art Institute and the California College of Arts and Crafts.

The event is co-sponsored by the University's Black Student Union and Women for Women.

Black History Month will conclude at 8 p.m. Feb. 28 when comedian and human rights activist Dick Gregory will speak in 115 Education Building.

Rep. Fauntroy scheduled to speak

Rep. Walter E. Fauntroy, D-Washington, D.C., will speak as part of the University's Black History Month celebration.

Fauntroy, who is chair of the board of directors of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, will speak at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 19, in 121 West Hall. The speech is free and open to the public.

A graduate of Virginia Union and Yale universities, Fauntroy gained national prominence in the early 1960s when Martin Luther King Jr. appointed him director of the Washington bureau of the SCLC,

Conference begins Feb. 21

"A Voyage into Excellence" is the theme of the University's sixth annual Leadership Conference on Feb. 21 and 22.

The conference is the largest of its kind in the country. Students and advisors from Ohio, Michigan and Indiana will assemble to discuss matters pertaining to leadership, professionalism and current issues.

International fraternity and sorority officers will offer advice as conference speakers.

Vic Boschini, assistant dean of students at Indiana University, will be the keynote speaker.

The conference is sponsored by Bowling Green's Interfraternity Council and Panhel Council. For further information call 372-2151.
